Portfolio Introduction: Terrorism Attack on 9/11

In my final research paper titled "Terrorism Attack on 9/11," I examine whether the attacks were an inside job or not. By examining the issues surrounding the biggest terrorist attack in the US, I have been able to showcase how much my research skills have developed over the course of the class. The 9/11 terrorist attacks affected many Americans, and hence there are many secondary and primary sources that present information about the entire incident. Writing a strong essay examining the facts surrounding the attacks requires a competent researcher who will be able separate a reliable source of information from one that is unreliable, something I believe I was able to achieve in my final research paper.

In the paper, I have cited various conspiracy theories that have been put forward and which point to the involvement of government officials in the attacks. I also make reference to findings from different commissions of inquiry and other interest groups. I was able to source this information from online sources, academic texts, as well as personal stories of structural engineers, and even commissioners, appointed to investigate the attacks. As a result of employing reliable primary and secondary research strategies, I was able to come up with an essay that is focused and persuasive. In this essay, I employ the APA writing style from the beginning to the end. As such, I demonstrated my understanding of this writing style and how to use it in an academic essay.

The essay is properly structured, with an introduction where I am able to tell readers the main issue being discussed and the main argument as well as a conclusion where I summarize the main arguments in the essay. By doing this, I demonstrated the techniques for effective introductions and conclusion. In the current essay, I cite only those arguments that make valid sense as far as the government's involvement in the 9/11 attacks is concerned. I am careful enough to avoid baseless and sensational conspiracy theories, thereby demonstrating my ability to evaluate evidence for bias.
